Receives Degree At Northwestern

Northwestern University conferred 3,362 degrees, diplomas and certificates at its 110th annual commencement on June 15 at McGaw Memorial Hall.

Speaking to the graduates and some 10,000 guests, President Elvis J. Stahr of Indiana University said there are limits to dissent in universities and when the limits are breached academic freedom, the freedom to express opinions, is dead.

Stahr said, "The right to question and criticize is important not just to scholars and students but to society itself; but academic freedom does not mean academic anarchy. It means freedom to express opinions; but it does not mean freedom to impose them."

The Northwestern University commencement marked the awarding of degrees, diplomas and certificates from the nine wards of degrees, diplomas schools and colleges on the Evanston and Chicago campuses.

Norman L. Bacon, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Bacon of Heber City received his Doctor of Dental Surgery degree at the commencement.
